As September nears, new apprenticeships come with increased focus on making them meaningful. Apprenticeships, only recently revived, are now being made more meaningful by policy changes to make sure more young people and communities benefit. Since its release in 2015, the Labour government's review of vocational education and training (VET) has focused on making apprenticeships more accessible, and doing so by ensuring 'meaningful' job opportunities for apprentices. This involves accounting for the growing proportion of apprentices working in the 'gig economy', and also giving apprenticeships a prominent role in the creation and maintenance of jobs. In its recently released whitepaper on promoting employment through apprenticeships the government highlighted that the UK needs more than a million skilled apprentices by 2030 3e33713323
