MultiPaint is a fast, cheap, and free paint program that runs on multiple Windows computers over a network with a browser-based user interface. MultiPaint was inspired by Paint Shop Pro, and its development was funded by university students on the MIT/OpenMPSU hack project. MultiPaint is most often used to create and share art, sketches, diagrams and other things you can do with paint. You can share the output of the program directly as a web image, or save it locally to a user's hard drive. MultiPaint can even be used on a single user's screen without additional software. MultiPaint's advantages over the traditional Paint program are speed, ease of use, and the ability to work over a network. However, it doesn't have every feature of a professional paint program, such as layers, transparency, gradients, text, etc. It can be used as a very basic paint program with a limited feature set. MultiPaint is most useful for creating art, sharing art with others, creating presentations, collaborating, and generally whipping up a quick piece of artwork. It's good for graphics, GUI design, architecture, and quick sketches. MultiPaint is a free program created by Doug Messenger and Peter Koulianos of MIT. No registration is required. MultiPaint is free and open source, and distributed under the GPL license. MultiPaint is being developed by The MIT Hackers for the purposes of research for the paint program that can run in a web browser. The MIT Hackers hopes the code and ideas in MultiPaint can be adapted into a much bigger, more versatile paint program that can run on multiple computers over the internet, without depending on a bulky server. MultiPaint is free, and distributed as freeware. You can get it on web sites all over the internet, or download it from the MIT Hackers website here: It's been downloaded over 100,000 times, and has a rating of 4.2 on Vibeze, and on the Planet sourceforge page. MultiPaint is designed to work with multiple computers, and can be used over the internet, or on a local network, without requiring any configuration.
