Download Auto Hide Q: std::map insert duplicate keys I am using std::map and I have two questions. When my program runs it inserts a key with a value of 3 into a map. It then checks to see if the key is already in the map. If the key is not present it inserts it. The only problem is, I can guarantee the key will be inserted multiple times because it is inserting the same key multiple times. I am not really a c++ programmer, I just have to do some work for school, and using a map really confused me because I didn't know what kind of container it was when I started. Anyways, here is my problem. Lets say I have a map of `std::map`, i.e, `map<>`. Now say I want to add

10, 11, 12. I will do `std::map>` `test = { {10, {10, 11}}, {11, {10, 11}}, {12, {10, 11}} };` Later in my code I try to get the value associated with 10, and it returns `{10, {10, 11}}` instead of `{10, {10, 11, 12}}`. If it helps, I am using gcc and building the program as a 64bit Windows application. I don't know if any of this matters, but I am using Visual Studio 2010. A: The standard doesn't guarantee anything (examples of scenarios such as this exist). You'll have to check that the key is already in the map before inserting it. You can use `std::map::find` to do so, eg. if `(test.find(key) != test.end())` return; In C++11 you can make this easy on yourself by using the `insert` member function to do the work for you. A: The reason this happens is because the `std::map` implementation (in the standard library) is allowed to re-use existing space for the `1cb139a0ed`
