A: Its no fixed size for click and on call to it to run. So the order doesn't matter. The present invention relates to a bucket or scoop for melting ice and snow from an open area and pouring it into a receptacle. A prior art scoop for melting and pouring ice and snow is shown in U.S. Pat. No. 5,049,401. The scoop is not complete, having an open top with a pouring spout and a bottom that is open into a receiving cavity, and does not protect the receiving cavity from entry of liquid from the open top. The scoop shown in U.S. Pat. No. 3,696,949 is an open bucket having a closing lid over a receiving cavity and does not have a pouring spout and does not have a bottom open into the receiving cavity. This scoop is no better than the scoop of U.S. Pat. No. 5,049,401. It is desirable that the scoop for melting snow and ice have the ability to melt snow, ice or ice and snow within an open area while preventing the liquid from overflowing the edge of the scoop and hitting anyone in the area. It is also desirable that the scoop be closed after melting when ready to pour and keep its contents from dropping out when not in use. In the fall of 2006, the federal government made a bold move to revolutionize the way we teach our children at the elementary school level. The response of many people of faith was immediate and vocal. Apparently, those who currently receive the preferential treatment in the federal school system think it is too late to make changes. However, in the wake of the U.S. Supreme Court ruling in Zelman v. Simmons-Harris (2002), the federal government has opened the door to private religious schools to be eligible for federal funding. The organization The Institute on Religion and Democracy (IRD) is recommending that all religious schools choose to utilize the public funding in order to preserve the integrity of the private school and therefore, the federal government's goal of "educating the whole person." School choice advocates seem to think that encouraging private schools to receive public funds will only enrich the quality of education and the information passed on to students. ACTNOW! advocates are concerned that religious schools will be ineligible to receive federal funding that goes directly to the parent (or student) 0cc13bf012

Share Australia's trade minister, Steven Ciobo, has warned that the Japan-Australia free trade agreement (JAFTA) is in trouble. Grossing more than 10 per cent of GDP and worth about A$22.5 billion annually, trade between the two countries has thrived since the JAFTA was signed in 2016, with trade in goods expected to grow an average of 2.5 per cent in each of the three years to 2020. The agreement, which would be the world's 12th-largest trade deal, would remove tariffs on many agricultural and other products, including dairy, wine, beef, fish, sugar and hops. But Ciobo told a conference that the deal had been "stronger than anticipated, and that process is about to slow down". "We just have to be a little bit careful on our optimism, because Australia's trade performance is not strong," he said. The double-dip recession in Australia was a "crisis of confidence" that affected other nations, he said. "Our exports have been declining in real terms for the last three years," he said. "The Japanese economy is one of the strongest in the world, and we're in the best position to compete in it." In 2017, Australia was Australia's third-largest export market, behind the US and China, but last year that
