Glass, Google Wear or other Google services or products, then you need to know how to test the app on a Google Glass device. But as Google Glass is not yet available from regular retailers, the only way to get a sample Google Glass device is via the Web. Google Glass, or @Empowered as it's called in many tweets, was announced back in April 2013. This fall, Google plans on introducing Google Glass as a commercially available product. For the time being, Google Glass is only available to developers, who will be able to buy one through a Special Edition Google Glass Developer Edition Developer Kit. Google Glass Designers Kit comes with a demo version of Glass and its accompanying charger, speaker and microUSB cable. There will be two versions of the Glass, a model with a 1280x720 display and one with a 1920x1080 display. In this article, we will show you how to set up a Google Glass unit with the Google Glass Developers Edition. First, we will be installing and setting up the Glass for the very first time. Our guide will involve, installing Google Glass software, connecting the Glass to your Wi-Fi network, getting a developer account and flashing the Developer Glassware.
