Q: How to create a jquery function that updates a form? When ever someone clicks an input field, it currently changes the form based on the value of that input. What I am trying to do is create a function that when they click the field, it will update a database instead of update the form. I am a beginner, and learning as I go. I was trying to use $.post() to post to a php file, but I couldn't get that to work. I was just wondering if there is a way to get the form to update using Jquery without just changing it in the input field. Many thanks!

A: why would you want to do that? If the form is the one updating, then it's just updating the form. In case you really need to do that, a simple way to do it is by accessing the html of the form via jQuery, copying the content to a temporary div and then update the content of the form via this temporary div. If you don't have any access to the form's html content you can also use ajax (instead of post).

In Super Intergalactic Gang, go head to head with an array of hard-to-kill alien invaders and take on the role of a futuristic, space agent attempting to protect Earth from the alien menace. In this intense 2D physics shooter, play in Free and Race modes, or enjoy the Fast and Retro versions for an even more futuristic experience. The story unfolds as you progress through 20+ missions, each with a unique mission structure and new enemies to defeat. Try your hand at playing with up to three friends in two-player local co-op mode, or play against them in Versus mode. Gaining in-depth access to the Super Intergalactic Gang universe unlocks additional missions and upgrades to improve your character. Wreck ten (or more) vicious aliens, and use them to your advantage with upgrades and new abilities. Upgrade your gear from the get-go, and select from a vast arsenal of weapons at your disposal. Upgrades come in various types, like the ones that grant you super abilities, armor upgrades, or weapons that deal heavy damage with a high rate of fire. Draw power-ups to get upgrades for you, your team, or your enemies. Collect your own power-ups and show the other super agents who's boss. Call in support from your friends and arm them with items to complete the mission. Why fight alone when you can team up with friends to take on wave after wave of alien enemies? Grimoire : Heralds of the Winged Exemplar : Link to second expansion Grimoire : Heralds of the Winged Exemplar is a single-player campaign featuring a full party-based RPG that features characters leveling up as you progress through the game and a variety of different approaches to solving each mission, as well as different areas to explore. A campaign which you won't find anywhere else, at least in this genre. Let me just say, the entire package is amazing. You, as a player, create and design your character with a degree of nuance and attention to detail never before seen in this genre, and then you are asked to adapt to a game designed for you. As far as providing answers to your prayers for a party-based RPG in more than fifteen years, you get none. Although there are many characters that are presented, most of them are in small numbers. No NPC's that follow you from mission to mission or area to area. No NPC's that have any attachment to your party of characters. No NPC's with any motive, or who are going to use force on you if you fail to complete their assigned mission. You, as a player, are made to feel like a hunted, and an entity that needs to move cautiously through the gameworld, as each NPC is a potential threat to you, and you need to observe and react to situations carefully, as the situation may present itself. Every mission has a specific result, and the further you move along, the more the players are asked to decide which of the options available to them is best, instead of you being forced to make a decision for them, or offering them choices with no real impact. Every NPC is given a set of specific responses and options that you, as the player, must select from to effectively handle the situation at hand. There are no menus with dozens of lines to read through, like you would find in a BioWare game,

What's new:

Download File Strangerwoddam, Tom Tucker found himself deep underground in the Cryptworld, miles below the surface. He could see the rows of coffins clearly stacked throughout the narrow hall. He wondered what would happen if a coffin fell to the floor with him inside. The Necromancer seemed to be ignoring them, his black eyes fixated on the distant ceiling. Tom didn't like where this was going. Maybe if he wasn't stuck so deep underground he'd be able to light a candle and explore just a little, but he couldn't even pick up a coffin to examine it. The Necromancer was a full 5-feet tall, so he was certainly able to look around even from his position at the back. The Necromancer started walking away from him, until he bumped into a shelf. The Necromancer's face twisted into one of sadness and rage. In a heartbeat, Tom had a flashback of the Necromancer waving a bloody knife in the middle of the pitch black night, murdering dozens and dozens of men and women. Most of them were refugees, asylum seekers, who had resorted to the underground only to be handed a one way ticket to the Cryptworld. Well he couldn't let him do that. He had to keep the Necromancer away from the coffins. Tom got ready to jump out of the coffin and started with soft, timid footsteps. The Necromancer turned to face him, his eyes an opaque black, like two souls vying for control of the body. I didn't think I'd start growling. Well, it's the truth, I'd never even gotten to growl at a dog. The Necromancer sighed. He could see he was most definitely going to die, so there was no point in fighting. He dropped his makeshift weapon to the floor. He could feel the strength draining from his arm. Tom looked down at the dagger which had fallen to the floor. His eyes widened as he heard his voice, uncontrollably screaming with a painful shrill. I guess I am used to talking on the radio. I just don't get a chance to practice much. He hesitated for a moment and allowed the Necromancer to get closer. He couldn't stop himself, he had to communicate something, get information. What if the Necromancer broke his neck at the last moment? "What's the name of your radio station?" Just the subject line of the question weakened the Necromancer's hold on the body. Then Tom slammed into the Necromancer and launched the Undead like

You might have heard of the frantic 2d action game ILLUSION?It is already out of stock and not available on the App Store. So, I am here today to give you a glimpse into this brand-new game!
